Twitter is skewering the 'New York Post' for a piece on why a man "won't date hot women"

By Marie Solis | April 13, 2017

Men have different ways of showing their commitment to feminism. One courageous man, for example, is doing his part to smash the patriarchy by only dating average-looking women. Inspiring!

The New York Post published a piece Wednesday titled "Why I Won't Date Hot Women Anymore," profiling such a man: an insufferable private equity executive named David Rochkind. The 40-year-old Upper West Side resident humbly told the Post there was a time when he could have anyone he wanted, which meant he always went after the "hottest girl you could find."

Not anymore!

After learning that hot women can't "carry a conversation," Rochkind reformed and started dating his fiancée, Carly Spindel, whom the Post calls a "merely beautiful woman."

As you can imagine, Twitter had some harsh words for the Rochkind and some words of advice for Spindel.

on up to three dates a week, courting 2 something blond models, but eventually realized that dating the prettiest young things had its drawbacks — he found th flighty, selfish and vapid.

"Beautiful women who get a fair amount of attention get full of themselves," he says. "Eventually, I was dreading getting dinner with them because they couldn't carry a conversation."

According to new research, Rochkind's behavior is not unique. In fact, it's quite common for men to date women who are not as attractive as they are.

Rochkind joins the ranks of men like Dave Hon, the man who bravely penned the column "Why I'll Never Date a Feminist" in September to similar outrage.

To these men and others we say: Boy, bye.
